HIS WEALTH CAME FROM AUNT.

Honest Taxpayer Thought He Was on a Graft Trail.

Once upon a time, a free-born taxpayer who could not be satisfied to let well enough alone by paying his taxes and letting other folks divvy on the stealings, went to the alderman of his ward and said:

"My dear sir, I come to ask you a question that has caused me several sleepless nights, and I hope you will have no hesitation in answering."

"Did you ever know an alderman to hesitate at anything?" was asked in reply.

"The question, sir, is this: How is it possible for an alderman in receipt of a salary of not more than $500 a year to accumulate at least $20,000 worth of riches in the space of five years?"

"Meaning that I have done that same?"

"Folks, it is so."

"There are various ways, my friend, such as buying stocks in an uptick or cornering the catnip market, but to be plain with you, owe my advancement to the death of my aunt. She died and left me all she had, and here in my desk are the written proofs."

"Truly, but I am disappointed," said the taxpayer, as he turned away. "I believed that I was on a hot trail, and that we would have another case for Hughes to investigate. I beg your pardon and will now take my departure."

Moral (if any be needed): "If he had asked me how much my aunt left me I should have been up a tree," smiled the alderman, as he rubbed his hands together and felt the blandness of integrity stealing over him. —Chicago News.

Model Farms.

The government should establish a small model farm on its own land in every rural congressional district, later perhaps in every county in the agricultural states. Let the Department of Agriculture show exactly what can be done on a small tract of land by proper cultivation, moderate fertilizing and due rotation of crops. The sight of the fields and the contrast with those of their neighbors, the knowledge of yields secured and profits possible, would be worth more than all the pamphlets poured out from the government printing office in years. The government ought not to hesitate before the comparatively small expense and labor involved in such a practical encouragement of what is the most important industry of our present and the stay and promise of our future. Disseminate knowledge of farming as it should and must be, instead of maintaining the pitiful bribe of a few free seeds. Declare everywhere, from the executive chamber, from the editorial office, from the platform, and above all from every college classroom and from every little schoolhouse in the land, the new crusade. Let the zeal for discovery, for experiment, for scientific advancement that have made the last century one of multiplied wonders, focus itself upon the problems of the oldest of sciences and arts; the cornerstone of all civilization; the improvement of tillage and making to grow two grains where only one grew before. Only thus may a multiplying population secure its permanent maintenance. Only thus may the struggle for existence that has power either to cure or bless be brought to any other termination than the peace of death.—J. J. Hill in The Desert Farmer

WERE IN LUNARY ECLIPSE.

Neighborhood Depopulated After the Spelling Bee.

I wanted to make inquiries about several different people in a certain neighborhood in Iowa, and when I found a farmer leaning over his gate I stopped my horse and asked him if he knew one Henry Smith.

"Yes, sir, I've known him for ten years," he replied, "but I can't tell you where he is to-day."

"And do you know James Thompson?"

"Jim Thompson? Why, him and me are like brothers, but I can't say where you'd find him to-day."

"How about George Snyder?"

"George Snyder? Why, I was tradin' horses with him the other week, but I can't say where he is to-day."

I asked after four or five other men and received the same answers, each one ending that it wasn't known where the man was just that day.

"Why don't you know where they are to-day?" I finally asked.

"Because, sir—because we had an old-fashioned spelling bee at the schoolhouse last night, with everybody loaded for war, and most everybody for five miles around has had to take to the woods and won't be coming out for three or four days yet!" —Baltimore American.

Intelligent Critic.

"Ha! ha! That was a funny joke you wrote about the fellow who didn't know a 'bunker' from a 'stymie,'" said the golfer.

"Make a hit with you golfers, eh?" replied the funny man.

"Yes. Such ignorance is laughable."

"I suppose so. Say, what are 'bunkers' and 'stymies,' anyway?"

Sounds of Words Necessary.

In ordinary practice writing is a device to bring to mind sounds which are well known. Unless the sounds are well known, or can be made known by other means, the written characters will both to convey them to those who study them or in preserving them after the language of which they are a part has vanished. The written characters which represent the ancient languages are easily translated by the scholar, but the sounds are lost. Were the old orators to come to life again the language in which they would declaim would, in all probability, be unintelligible.

Not Interested.

"This race problem is getting to be a very serious thing. Are you at all interested in it?"
